Citizenship at Work: An Old/New Paradigm for Employment Relations?

Michel Coutu and Gregor Murray
Interuniversity Research Centre on Globalization and Work
(CRIMT - www.crimt.org)
School of Industrial Relations, Université de Montréal

2014 International CRIMT Conference
New Frontiers for Citizenship at Work
14 May 2014
I. Industrial Citizenship: A Broken Paradigm
   A. The Industrial Citizenship Project
   B. Sources of Rupture

II. The Future of Citizenship at Work: A Project in the Making
   A. Citizenship at work: Points of Departure
   B. Citizenship at work: A contested project
   C. Connections: The interaction between different spheres of activity
   D. Processes : Actors and their Experiments
I. Industrial Citizenship: A Broken Paradigm

A. The Industrial Citizenship Project

B. Sources of Rupture
   • Globalization
   • Reconfiguration of organizational forms and implications for employment
   • Weakening of collective actors
   • Erosion of the social state
   • Decoupling of emerging models of work and the institutional framework
II. The Future of Citizenship at Work: A Project in the Making

A. Citizenship at work: Points of Departure
B. Citizenship at work: A contested project
C. Connections: The interaction between different spheres of activity
D. Processes: Actors and their Experiments
C. Connections: The interaction between different spheres of activity

1. Farewell to the Male Breadwinner: Re-imagining the Gender Contract
2. Spatiality and Social Systems: Work Is No Longer in a Single Physical Location
3. Spatiality: Coming to Terms with the Transnational Division of Labour
4. Linking Individual and Collective Identities
5. The Meaning of Work
6. Can Work be Made Sustainable?
7. Capabilities and Capacity
D. Processes : Actors and their Experiments

1) The negotiated nature of citizenship at work
2) Studying the work of actors
3) Studying work and firms in context
4) The experimental nature of the citizenship at work project